

Moonlight dining experience

In the Cyakang Community, meet young people who have returned home and are learning traditions and bringing new perspectives. Enjoy an outdoor dining experience, while building meaningful connections with the land. One dish after another is served: locally grown vegetables, and pork. This is a meal, an experience to remember, a story of the struggles of life.

Community tour

On a walking tour, become immersed in indigenous community life by visiting a farm, a traditional mouth harp maker, and a grocery store. Enter traditional forest land to observe the rich natural resources of the Cyakang Community. Listen to stories of how the ancestors developed the land and with your two feet explore the lives of the people on it.

Truku language and songs

As the Truku people once lived high in the mountains, most of their traditional songs are solos or duets that mimic echoing in the valleys, revealing a solitary lifestyle. The Truku language carries the history and culture of the Truku people. In a bamboo forest, learn Truku songs and in a local grocery store play games based on the Truku language.

Three-stone hearth

In the Truku culture, starting a fire is a life skill and a meaningful act. In the past, the Truku people, lighted a fire in a "three-stone" hearth, symbolizing family and its continuation. First, needed materials are collected from a bamboo forest, then the traditional knowledge related to starting a fire is taught. If it is taking too long for a fire to start, the Truku people say that flames rise in response to singing and dancing.

The dream of Truku youngsters

In the Truku language, geng ba means "plow it," an expression of working the land. Beginning last year, some young people who have returned to this community constructed traditional bamboo dwellings. This year, they designed Geng Ba Park, to create a place that combines agriculture, food, weaving, and archery, to teach Truku culture and traditional skills. Here, the lifestyle of the past has been revived. During a visit, also learn about the construction processes of the bamboo buildings.
