

Hunter's outdoor dining table

From Yongling Mountain are panoramic views of the East Rift Valley. Here, listen to the stories of the Bunun tribe and sample traditional ingredients including taro root, sweet potatoes, pigeon peas, millet and corn. Also, gather around a fire to grill pieces of pork, just as Bunun hunters once did.

Indigenous cuisine meals are also available in the community.

Hunter's path guided tour

Hunters climb Yongling Mountain on their way to their hunting grounds. Before setting out, they worship the ancestral spirits with a respectful and sincere attitude. Along a path used by hunters, learn about traps made from slate and animal tracks, as well as traditional plant dyes and plant materials for weaving baskets.

Traditional report on hunting achievements

Hunters returning to the community would form a circle to report on their achievements in four-syllable rhythms. Women and others standing outside the circle would respond with joy. During this traditional activity, younger generations observed the hunters' spirit and blood lines

Turmeric moichi making

The Bunun are very hospitable. They produce moichi using pestle and mortar to welcome friends. To glutinous rice is added the traditional staple grain, millet, as well as turmeric, a more recent crop that is claimed to have health benefits. This creates a unique flavor. Visitors can also experience making moichi.

Bunun hunting experience

In addition to finding their way through mountain forests, hunters had to be skilled at using a spear. They would obtain a bamboo pole and sharpen it to a tip to which they applied natural plant poisons. Bows and arrows were also important weapons. In the Yongkang Community, test your archery and spear-throwing skills.
